

We Found the Weapons of Mass Destruction

They're
in the President's Budget.

Thinking the unthinkable

Believe it or not, the Administration wants to build a “new family” of nuclear weapons. Their official nuclear plan lowers the threshold for using nuclear weapons, targets non-nuclear countries with nuclear weapons and suggests that the US develop “more usable” nuclear weapons for “certain battlefield situations.”

Hypocrisy is a poor substitute for leadership

The President claimed we invaded Iraq to control the spread of weapons of mass destruction, yet they want to build new ones and resume nuclear testing. A policy of “do as we say, not as we do” undermines our leadership, destroys our credibility and encourages nuclear proliferation.

More security, not more weapons

There is no security in building new nuclear weapons. True American security lies in securing and dismantling the world's nuclear arsenal, not building new ones.
